the restoration of the Union.

Mr. Sumner depairs of the sympathy of Europe, and sees scarcely a gleam of encouragement in public opinion, by his side in his high position. He "Tells." He clings to the hope, nevertheless, that the Federal cause will triumph, and that "the death of slavery will be the life of the nation."

Mr. Sumner is sincere in his conviction. He believes in his country, in his countrymen, in his country and in evil, in suffering and in calamity, and even in the dark shadow of that valley which is darker than the valley of death. His mistake is that of an enthusiast in imagining that his countrymen are with him. He is mistaken in his estimate of the influence of preachers, lecturers, and women—who would abate slavery at a blow, and trust to Heaven that the consequences would not be disastrous either to the black race or to the white. He is no statesman, and does not know the true position of the country, or the position in the centre of which he stands. He will not confess, what all beyond that narrow limit know to a certainty, that the vast majority of the American people are only antagonists in so far as they oppose the extension of slavery; and that they would as willingly recognise it where it exists as Governor Seymour himself, provided that in recognition they could restore the Union. Were they to do this, they would be guilty of the same old claim, the merit of fighting for the freedom of negroes without being guilty of hypocrisy. But they are not such as he; nor is there a chance that they ever will be, until the South shall be recognised as independent and free to do as it pleases.

Mr. Sumner is a man of high character, and Mr. Wendell Phillips, of Massachusetts, and Mr. Vallandigham, of Ohio, may shake hands, and Mr. Charles Sumner affiliate himself among the brotherhood of Sumners or Sencars, and strike up a permanent association with the "Witch of Endor," "venerable" and "wise" Mrs. Wood, the "Tycoon" of the Democracy.

The news from Chattanooga, though somewhat dampened by the fear of a new aggressive movement on the part of the rebels, has not been altogether so slightly produced the premium on gold; but, notwithstanding this exceptional action on the money

TRANSPORTATION TO AUSTRALIA.

(From the Times.)

THE letters which have recently appeared in our columns on the subject of transportation to Australia embody in a somewhat piquant form the two opposite views of the subject. The first is the result of the immediate occasion of Mr. Edward Wilson's protest against the new laws that the Lord Dalhousie has been chartered by the Government to convey two or three hundred convicts to West in Australia. Mr. Wilson inveighs against this proceeding in no measured terms, as an outrage against the rights of the colonies, and against the Australian Continent. He utterly denies the existence of any obstacles to prevent the convict population of the west filtering eastward and deluging the gold-diggings and territories of Southern Australia. He expresses his belief that free colonists are perfectly determined to resist the "invasion," as he calls it, at any price, and threatens us with free republics in the shape of transportation from Australia to England, if we persist. "A Victorian" follows him in a more temperate tone. Mr. Ross D. Mangins on the other hand, maintains the right of the mother country to make arrangements for the disposal of its criminals with any colony that may be willing to receive them, dwells on the utility of convict labour to infant communities, and the notorious fact that the older Australia has been practically peopled by convicts, and that through the state in which Western Australia is now is. He expresses absolute scepticism as to the alleged frequency of escapes from Fremantle and the West to the southern and eastern ports, and challenges his antagonist to produce a few well-authenticated instances. He then proceeds to demolish the other's position with consistency for denouncing and judging to others the use of that very form of labour to which the most flourishing provinces of Australia are so deeply indebted.

Before we revert to the practical reasons which appear to us decisive of the matter in dispute, we feel bound to record our own views on the subject of transportation, as well as from the temperate tone, of Mr. Wilson's letter. We must not be led by words.

The question, How to dispose of our felons: is has for some time been agitating the public mind. Transportation to Botany Bay, the only mode of disposal that was approved recipes of the olden time when George II. and George IV. were kings. But the thing was so evident that the convicts outnumbered much the more the population of the colony, that the Government was produced the description of which outraged the feelings of soberminded, benevolent men in this country, and on representations from the colonies, the Colonial Department and Parliament abandoned the system of transportation to Australia altogether, and adopted the scheme of home penitentiaries, hulks, and so forth. But the Government have not been found for felons at large, with the promise of reformation and such instruction as should enable the felon when released, to earn an honest livelihood. The ticket-of-leave system, which is the basis of that charge. Now, to sever, everyone agreed that the scheme of reformation and ticket-of-leave release from prison, with free license to prey upon the community, was a failure. They have had a special commission appointed to investigate the matter, and they have recommended a recurrence to the scheme of transportation to such colonies as are willing to receive convicts, and of course, under such restrictions as

THE QUEEN'S PROCLAMATION OF THE 1st OF MAY, 1861, VINDICATED BY THE SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES.

From the Journal of September 2013

(From the Economist, September 26th.)

British public will not readily forget the terrible outburst of indignation with which the Queen's Proclamation of the 13th of May, 1861, was received by the people of this country. The news of the outrage was immediately after the news of the attack on Sumter, and of the proclamation of the President of the 27th of April,—establishing a blockade of the ports in the rebellious States—arrived in London. The indignation of the neutrality of the United States in the contest then broke out, and the States and States, and warned all her Majesty's subjects, and British shipowners especially, that any vessel was in the United States, and that contrary British subjects were bound to submit to the laws of the United States. The Queen's Proclamation, after words is declared, for the necessary guidance of the Queen's subjects, that the cruisers of the United States were not to be considered pirates, but they were entitled by the law of nations to exercise those belligerent rights as their Northern brethren.

In consequence of this proclamation, the most virulent abuse was heaped by the Federal Press on the British Government and people. The proclamation was denounced as an act of foreign intervention—interference with the rights of the Southern States—interference of the Southern States—in short, an act of hostility and an outrage never to be forgotten or forgiven by the Great Republic. Nor was it any kind to the Press. Public men of some eminence in the Federal Government were found to be "undying hostility" to England, and that the day for vengeance was not so far off as we were. In the midst of all this fury, Mr. Sewa d, our ambassador, was not silent. He complained and reprimanded in some of his longest and most careful dispatches. He pointed out the error of the war, and the proclamation was instantly recalled. The act was not fortunately in a condition, by means of judgment recently pronounced by the Supreme Court of the United States, to form a claim on opinion on the part of the complainants, and on the justice of this indignation.

British private Hiawatha was, we believe, the neutral ship captured by the Federal navy. She was seized in Hampton Roads on the 20th of May, 1861, and was taken to the Federal navy yard at Washington for alleged violation of the blockade of the ports of Virginia, established and formally declared by the proclamations of the President published there the 27th and 30th of April, 1861. By those proclamations fifteen days were fixed as the limit in which neutral ships were to liberty to leave unladen ports; the Hiawatha had, in fact, left five days after the prescribed period, her departure being delayed by the want of a tug to tow her to sea. The legality of this capture was questioned by the owners of the ship before the Federal Court of Admiralty, and the first and chief point taken and argued was that the ship had not been captured after she existed at the time when the blockade was declared by the Federal Government to declare war and to exercise belligerent rights against the ships of neutral nations, and that Congress, and the President, had no authority to declare war against the United States, after the power to declare such war had been taken from them by the Constitution.

Now, the first fact, at least, of this contention is remarkably in accordance with the views expressed by the Federal Government itself soon after the opening of the blockade. The President, it is to be remembered, both the President and Mr. Lincoln, steadily contended that the so-called blockade was, in fact, not in any respect a blockade at all. He said that it was not a blockade, but a mere interference at the interdicted ports under the municipal law of Government. They argued that there was no war, and, therefore, no belligerents to recognize, and that the closing of the ports was a mere Customs matter, and that the Government was not at war. Accordingly, the President, in his Message of the 5th July, 1861, speaks of the proclamation closing the blockade as a proclamation for closing the ports to vessels proceeding in or from the ports. The signature of a blockade, and not of a port, is, in his report to the President of the same date, however, that the closing of the ports was done only by the performance of a domestic municipal law, and that the Government was not at war. The arguments by the rules of blockade were, as far as able, adopted and made applicable to the case which were the views which it was found convenient to adopt upon remonstrating with England and France, and the Government of the Northern States had no objection to the course pursued by the rights of belligerents. But when the capture of American ships had to be justified before a Court of Admiralty, it was seen at once that, if such views were sound, the seizure was altogether illegal, and accordingly, the Federal law officers, not feeling themselves bound to support the views of the Government, did not hesitate to do so for the protection of the captured ships, on grounds diametrically opposed in every respect to those which had hitherto been put forward by the President and his

the question of the inferior Court was not difficult in settling the Hilawatha. The owners of the ship claimed that, after a considerable delay, the appeal heard before the Supreme Court of the United States, composed of nine Judges, sitting at Washington, D.C., the judgment of the Court was delivered as set at sitting.

On the great question—whether, on the 30th of April, 1861—the day on which the Hilawatha was seized—a war, and consequently a legal blockade, had been declared by the President of the United States, the Court was divided in opinion in the proportion of five to four. The majority held that the proclamation issued by the President on the 30th of April, 1861, and by which the ports of the Southern States were closed to imports in the possession of the insurgents, created a state of war as existing between the Federal Government and the States whose ports were born as the news of the attack on Fort Sumter and organization of a Government by the seceding States, assuming to act as a belligerent, could become a precedent for the United States to follow. The President issued his Proclamation of neutrality, using hostilities as existing between the Government of the United States and certain States, and the United States Confederation, and this was immediately followed by similar declarations of neutrality by other nations.

For such an official recognition by the Government, it is not necessary to deny the existence of a war with all its consequences as regards Territory. They cannot ask a Court to set a technicality against the existence of a war which all admit and which is the basis of the Government in the history of the human race, and thus in the arm of the Government and paralyze its action.

the passage of the judgment just cited, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court came to give their sanction to the propriety of issuing the Queen's proclamation; and then proceeded to make rather an use of it in support of their argument. It is not so much as an important piece of evidence, to prove the propriety of the Queen's proclamation, as to establish a blockade,—although it is notorious that the British Government was founded upon the President's Proclamation,—and then it is made as an easy and obvious answer to the British objection, whose ship was seized after the British proclamation, that the British Government had not received an official recognition by his own Government, which "an official recognition by his own Government, in all events, for him to deny the existence of the war with all its legal consequences."

As to the "subtle definitions" and "sophisms" of which the Court so much boasted, they were not invented by the counsel for the Hawatha. They were merely the olden name of the same "sophisms" which, as we have seen, were first suggested by President Lincoln. Mr. Seward, when deprecating any action against the European Powers, and which, indeed, seem to

...is already got up for European circulation. It is a book of 100 pages, written in English. It is called "The Law of Nations is also called the Law of the Nations." It is founded on the common consent of the common sense of the world. It contains such common sense doctrine as that which this Government has been so long expounding. That insurgents who have risen in rebellion against their Sovereign, expelled her established a revolutionary Government, and armies, and commenced hostilities, are wrong because the Government was wrong in order to dismember and destroy it is not a sound doctrine. It is an insurrection. Whether the President is a traitor or not is a question of fact, not of law. Insurrection has met with such a crushing resistance, and a civil war of such alarming dimensions as will compel him to accord to them the treatment of belligerents, is a question to be decided by the Government.

These reasons the majority of the Supreme Court decided that the President had a right, jure imperii, to institute a blockade of ports in possession of the rebels. And, accordingly, the judgment of the Supreme Court was affirmed, and the Hiveston released.

The small now advert shortly to the judgment of the Court on the Court, of whom the Chief Justice was one, in order to bring to the notice of the public the views of the majority of the Justices. Justice Nelson, who delivered the judgment of the majority, and very briefly discussed of all the law involved, stated the ground of their decision in the following words: "The Court, on a careful consideration of this case, which the views of other Justices has admitted, is in complete agreement with the conclusion that no civil war existed between the Government and the States in insurrec-

GLVING IRON.—A party of gentlemen, of whom were the Hon. Captain Ward, M.I.C., Engineer for Harbours, the City Engineer, and several of the largest importers of ironmongery in the city—attended yesterday morning at a factory belonging to Mr. Zollner, in York-street, for the purpose of witnessing some experiments in galvanizing iron. For some time past Mr. Zollner has entertained belief that the galvanizing process might be carried there as well and as cheaply as at home, and accordingly having provided the necessary apparatus, he has, within the last few days, brought it into successful operation. We need scarcely state that the object in galvanizing iron is to protect it from the corroding acts of exposure to the atmosphere or to sea water, so that it is consequently particularly valuable in its application to the ironwork used in shipbuilding.

the visitors were present a quantity of fresh nails, and a number of small buckets, underwent galvanizing process. It was stated that they had previously been cleaned with a solution of sulphuric acid; after which they had been put in a large tank of water to be kept clean, and again coated with another solution of sulphuric acid, to prevent oxidation; after which they had been put into a drying

As the latter they were ready for being galvanised. The final operation consisted in dipping them in a bath containing a solution of zinc and tin; after being dipped they were thrown into a tub of water to cool, and were then dried off in sawdust. The small packets, which had been made for the purpose at Mr. Liner's factory, were, on being dipped, presented to the company for examination; the effect of the dipping was to give them a silvery crystallised surface. The most successful receipt was the following:

the same time opinion expressed respecting the galvanizing was, that it was quite equal to that of sorted articles, and that the process might be adopted on here with much advantage, especially in connection with the manufacture of iron tanks, buckets, and other domestic utensils: as, in the event of these being available in Sydney even at the same price as they are to import, the ironmongers would have no necessity to keep so large a stock of them on hand as they do at present. Samples were shown of articles of the above scription, manufactured by Mr. Zollner; some of them had been galvanized, and others were about to undergo the process. The company evinced much interest in the operation, and complimented Mr. Zollner on his having had the courage to start galvanizing in Sydney, attended, as the expert had been, with very great trouble and expense; it being as their belief that when the utility of the process became known it would be in extensive land. It was mentioned by Mr. Zollner that the cost of the metal and of fitting up the bath, had run upwards of $600. Before the company retired the treatments were partaken of, when Captain Ward discussed the health of Mr. Zollner, remarking that they must all admire the energy of a man who could start an enterprise of this kind without the assistance of legislation; he hoped to see many men of his class attempt similar works without the aid of protection.

would prepare "Success to Mr. Zollner, and no objection!" Mr. Zollner briefly thanked the company for their kind wishes, and responded by drinking the continuance of Free Trade.

ATTEMPT TO ROB THE TUENA MAIL.—On Monday at nine o'clock, when Fred. Munoz, son of the tractor for carrying the mail from Goulburn to Tuena and Laggan, was within about a mile of the place on his way from Tuena, he heard a noise which he thought was caused by some one approaching, and he therefore put his horse into a canter. As he did so a man rushed from behind a tree and fired at "step" but young Munox pushed his horse to a gallop and escaped. As he did so, however, the cow, who was quite close to him, struck at him with all the boy believes to have been a gun, inflicting a very severe blow on the thigh.—Gowburn Herald.

A man sold a stolen horse at auction Saturday week, but hearing that the police were looking for him, he restored the horse, and was reted on Thursday, by a person named Cannon, in act of cutting the animal's throat, having previously cut off that portion of the hide which was used by the brands. He was immediately seized the miners, and handed over to the police when
